Egora

The Worldwide Stock-market of Ideas

Thursday, Dec. 6

2 p.m. • Room F-309

Egora (short for electronic and agora) is a groundbreaking technology for political organization that evolves democracy to a new level. Through the essential concept of "the worldwide stock-market of ideas," it gives us the benefits of two different democratic arrangements: the dynamics of a small-scale citizen democracy and the stability and scalability of a representative democracy. Consequently, instead of representative democracy being candidate-centered and money-driven, Egora makes it idea-centered and people-driven. But, Egora is not just a political power-management system; it is first and foremost a philosophical tool of learning and mutual understanding. This is why Cezary Jurewicz calls it an "intelligent democracy."

Cezary Jurewicz is a philosopher from the Chicagoland area. After serving four years in the U.S. Marine Corps, he attended Triton Community College to receive an Associate of Fine Arts degree in music. This was followed by a Bachelor of Interdisciplinary Studies with minors in philosophy and economics from Northeastern Illinois University.
